Thirty days after their mother's death, members of the Hasson family discover that their virtuous mother was the daughter of a Nazi officer. This revelation lets loose the family demons, and throws them all into a collective ideological and religious turmoil, which quickly becomes each member's personal turmoil. The members of the family must deal with disturbing questions, that most of us don't ask ourselves: are we Jewish? In what was does our Jewishness manifest itself? What kind of Judiasm do we choose for ourselves? As the ponder these questions, the family members are compelled to face a harsh mirror, forcing them to re-examine not only their own identity, but the important relationships in their lives.
