The Play

Frida Kahlo (1907-1954) was known during her lifetime as famous painter Diego Rivera's wife. In Mexico, her homeland, she was recognized as a colorful & extraordinary person, as well as a brave woman with a unique and tragic life story. The fact that she was known as Rivera's wife and a "colorful figure" overshadowed her being an important and original artist. For many years Kahlo had hidden behind many masks and liked to portray herself as Rivera's little wife and a naive amateur painter. But beneath the spectacular facade, a much more complex personality was hidden. Her close friends used to call her "the great pretender". This work of theater and dance follows the story of this unique artist, shedding light on key events that occurred during her short life.
