Nurit wants to get married. She doesn't have time for unnecessary dating or passing affairs. She's not getting any younger – and not only that, she's also about to die. Nurit asks her best friend Ayelet to find her a husband. Preferably the prince of her dreams, but anyone will do. It's her last request. The "prince" Ayelet finds is Arik: an ex from her distant past and a Peter Pan type who refuses to grow up. Arik's father, Gidon, has long been pleading with him to get married and have children. Ayelet offers him Nurit, someone special with special intentions. But this strange love story is about to get even more complicated: Gidon doesn't know whom Arik has chosen to marry, Nurit doesn't know that Arik still loves Ayelet, and Arik doesn't know that Nurit has just a few months left to live.
