Kazablan falls in love with the daughter of the housing project's owner, a Polish immigrant who strongly opposes the relationship between his daughter and Kazablan due to Kazablan's uncultured image. The play explores issues that touch on the soul of Israeli society, including ethnic divisions, Ashkenazi-Mizrachi relations, interdenominational marriage, acceptance of the Other, sociocultural disparities, social protest and more.

Based on Yigal Musinzon's original play staged at the Cameri Theater (1954), directed by Gershon Plotkin. The first production of the musical was staged at the Giora Godik Theater (1966), directed by Yoel Zilberg.

In collaboration with Teatron HaShaa
