The Play

Ada, the widow of esteemed theater personality Shmuel Hammerschlag, is working on preparations for a commemorative evening in his honor. Her excitement turns to despair when she realizes that the event might not take place due to her financial struggles. Rachel Bloch, a retired actress and the deceased man's former lover, offers to fully sponsor the event; but in exchange, she demands to be given center stage. Ada is torn between her desire to host the glittering event and shine in it, and the disgust she feels toward her old enemy. The two divas launch into a vicious battle over the memory of the dead, raising all the demons of the past in the process.
